Dear Booksellers,

Writing this letter sweltering in the middle of a summer heatwave has us looking forward to the cooler weather of the autumn months, cosy nights in, and a fantastic pile of brand new books to read. We are continuing to celebrate the National Year of Reading – a campaign to tackle the decline of reading for enjoyment in children, young people and adults. Throughout this magazine, you'll see the National Year of Reading 'Go All In' logo next to titles which we think are perfect for recommending.

We have to start with Gruffalo Granny, of course. Unless you've been living in the deep dark wood, you'll know that we are publishing the third Gruffalo book by Julia Donaldson and Axel Scheffler at 8am on 10th September. The contents must remain a closely guarded secret until then, but we have lots of activities planned and plenty of POS – so watch this space!

Other children's highlights include Don't Feed the Troll, the wonderful new picture book from Emily Gravett (available in a signed Indie Edition with free print), the return of a festive favourite with How Winston Delivered a Christmas Wish by Alex T. Smith, and The Frozen King, a wintry new Greenwild novel, by Pari Thomson. For YA fans, we have The Siren, the eagerly-awaited dark academia novel from Tomi Adeyemi.

Our adult fiction line up this autumn is stellar. Fans of Elizabeth Jane Howard's Cazelet Chronicles are sure to enjoy The Golden Hours, the start of a new trilogy by Louisa Young continuing the family's story in the Swinging Sixties. Readers of literary speculative fiction will love Exit Party by Emily St. John Mandel (available as an Indie Exclusive), and China Miéville's magnum opus, The Rouse, twenty years in the writing. Colm Tóibín has followed up last year's A Long Winter with The Bridge, a brilliant – and brand new – story in the same gifty format, and Sarah Moss has written the taut, gripping The Winter Guest.

Crime writers extraordinaire Ann Cleeves and Peter James return with the new Matthew Venn novel and the 22nd Roy Grace thriller respectively. And Harry Whittaker, Lucinda Riley's son, returns to the Seven Sisters universe with the sweeping saga Orlando, featuring guest appearances from beloved characters from the series. All three are available as signed Indie Exclusives with stunning designed edges.

Readers of non-fiction have some exciting books to look forward to. Games of My Life by Sir Alex Ferguson is a gorgeous gift or self-purchase for football fans, illustrated throughout with never-before-seen photographs from Sir Alex's glittering career as a player and a manager. Threads is the fascinating autobiography of iconic fashion designer Sir Paul Smith, published to coincide with his 80th birthday, while Have It is the latest poetry collection from the Bard of Salford, John Cooper Clarke. Finally, The Ancient Ways by practising hedge-witch Seren Hawley-Plows is a brilliant seasonal guide to the folklore and traditions of the natural world.

Return to one of the most beloved families in British literature in this brilliant new Cazalet Chronicles instalment, created by Elizabeth Jane Howard and now continued by bestselling author – and Elizabeth Jane Howard's niece – Louisa Young.

It's 1962, and the Cazalet family are gathering to celebrate the holidays. Familiar faces will reappear, newcomers will be introduced, and the legacy of the Cazalets continues on into the swinging sixties . . .

A perfect entry point into the series for new readers and a must-read for fans dying to know what happens next, we have an Indie Exclusive for you with designed edges and signed patterned endpapers.

'A wonderful opportunity to bring new readers to the Cazalet Chronicles and delight existing ones. As elegant, sweeping and absorbing as you could wish'

Read a letter from Louisa Young to tell you more about continuing a classic:

Like many of you, I was enchanted by the Cazalets from my first reading of the first page. Unlike many, I was able to tell the author so directly. Elizabeth Jane Howard, to give her her full authorial title, was to me and my siblings Aunt Jane. Though the connection was not by blood – she was married to our father's brother during the Second World War – it was strong. During my childhood she was a funny, glamorous, friendly and intense visitor: the kind of grown-up who didn't feel the need to pretend either that I was an adult or that she was a child in order to converse. The kind you were glad was coming over. Later, she became a proper friend, and a keen supporter of me as a young writer. I loved her and I miss her.

The idea of continuing the Cazalet Chronicles seemed such rank impertinence when I first had it that I thought I must be joking. How could I even think it! But the possibility crept up on me that perhaps it could become a reality, and after a bit it started to seem brilliant. All Change, Jane's final volume, ends at Christmas 1958: I was born in spring 1959. It's a sign! I knew several of the origin stories and origin people that Jane had used as a base for her fiction – my father, my uncles, my grandparents. I know that world in reality as well as from fiction. I have clear and present memory of the era her characters would be moving into. And those characters have so much life still to live that I couldn't imagine they weren't somehow still existing, somewhere off stage. The sixties were going on: politics, miniskirts, sex and drugs and rock 'n' roll, the working classes, foreigners. How were they all taking to that? Tangled in with societal changes were important matters of unfinished business that needed sorting out for individuals. The story is just not over.

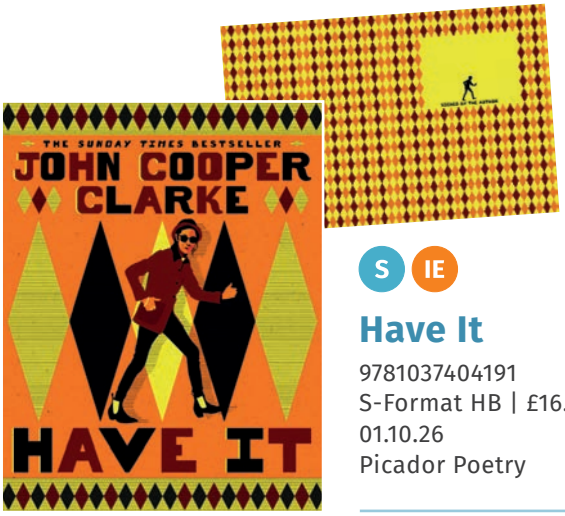

So I soul-searched, and pondered, and talked to Jane in my head, and felt myself to be a presumptuous nepo-baby, and reminded myself that even so it's still quite a good idea, and finally made my impertinent claim to a baton that nobody was actually passing on to me, but that I hoped I might do justice to. And the powers-that-be allowed me, for which I am unutterably grateful.

It is a joy for me to hang out with these old friends again, and I hope it is for you too.

– Louisa Young

Told through the pagan wheel of the year, The Ancient Ways is an exploration of how nature changes throughout the seasons – looking at solstices, equinoxes, legends, and festivals and how these stories and traditions can help you deepen your connection with nature.

Hedgewitch Seren Hawley-Plows weaves these myths and stories together beautifully with tools and inspiration of how to bring the power of ancient tradition into a modern world and help you find magic in the wilds of nature.

Featuring breathtaking illustrations by Joe McLaren, seasonal recipes and more, The Ancient Ways transports readers from bustling cities and sleepy villages into untamed landscapes and rich, old communities. Complete with gold foiling on the cover, it is the ultimate seasonal gift, and paired with the POS materials we have on offer, it is guaranteed to make a stunning window display.

Pan Mac Team Pick
Julia Finnegan

'A beautifully-presented treat of a book that helps us to explore nature through the changing seasons'

The leaves on the trees begin to fall, the first of the autumnal berries are collected and woodsmoke rises into the sky from the houses that inhabit the countryside. There is an atmosphere of anticipation as people start to prepare winter stocks, while small animals race to gather in their own harvest. The first great feast of the season is welcomed in with singing and merriment, bidding farewell to the sun as it makes its journey into the waning of the year. Nearby, the local Druid sets up a ceremony at a Neolithic sacred site to thank the gods of the harvest for the year's abundance, while the wise woman of the village makes her journey through the ritual year to gather in the last of the herbs. As the next phase of the harvest is gathered up, the berries picked and preserved and wild edibles foraged, the autumnal feast is laid out on a long oak table. The Equinox fire is lit, and communities breathe a sigh of relief as, just like the land, they can start to rest after a busy harvest season.

In the Northern Hemisphere, we've reached the Autumn Equinox, a solar event that mirrors the Spring Equinox, taking place on 20–23 September, and one that is celebrated worldwide.

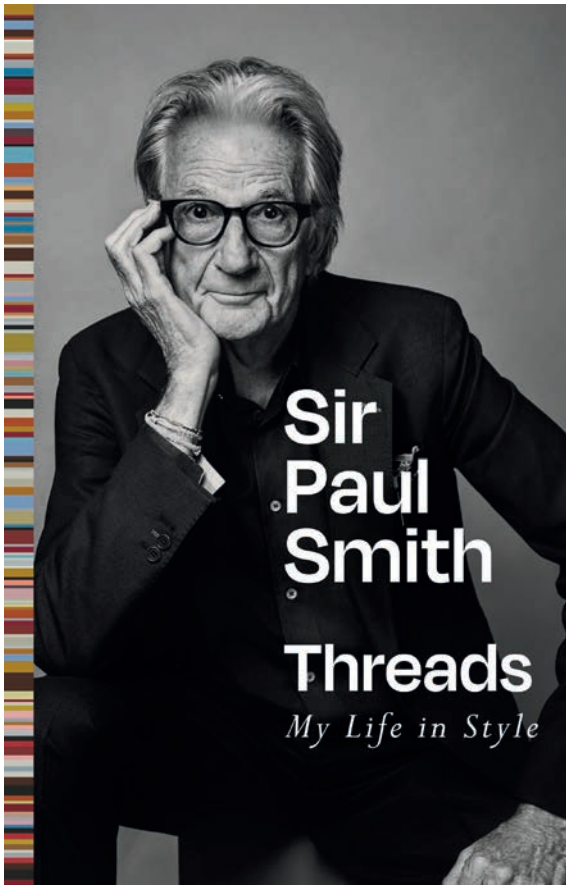

This time is all about embracing the coming darkness and the waning of the year. Autumn has begun to show its colours amongst the greens and golds of the earth. Golden light shines down country lanes, landing on the first of the falling umber leaves. Raindrops glisten on ripe berries that burst in the hedgerows and in the trees. Blackbirds, song thrushes and starlings peck enthusiastically at these wild fruits. The sun is still warm and the leaves still mostly green, yet there is a slight chill in the morning air that is wrapped in pockets of fog. The green, vibrant plant world has died back, replaced with shades of ochre and amber, and there is a slight musty scent of soil underfoot. Smoke swirls out of nearby chimneys in rural households, rising up into the sky and filling the lanes with a comforting smell of woodsmoke.

The Autumn Equinox is the beginning of root energy, of rest and renewal and a desire to return to your homes and hearth, just as the animal and the plant worlds do. Although this time of year can create a sense of dread for the coming winter, this season is important and magical, full of colour, bounty and an opportunity to slow down, rest and find balance once more. It's also the beginning of the feasting season, full of food and fires and connecting with the land. It's a time to slow down and breathe, using this change to work in alignment with the seasons and bring balance to our minds and bodies.

Discover the untold story of Sir Paul Smith, a true British fashion icon whose journey is as unconventional as his designs.

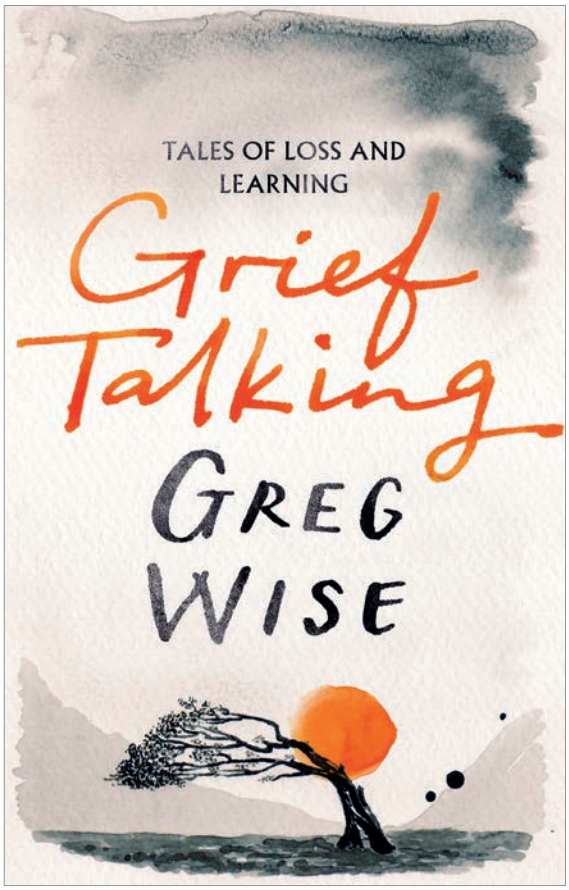

From a dream of being a professional racing cyclist to a life-altering accident, Paul Smith's path to building a global fashion empire is one of immense curiosity and independence.

In Threads, Sir Paul shares candid memories from a life in style, starting with a tiny shop in a Nottingham alleyway before immersing himself in the 1960s London art and fashion scene. With his signature wit, he reveals what it was like to dress legends including David Bowie, Daniel Day-Lewis, and Sir Alex Ferguson, and how he fought to keep his brand independent in a globalised industry.

This book is more than a fashion memoir; guided by his father's advice to work hard and stay curious, it serves as a masterclass on finding the extraordinary in the everyday.

What if the messy, chaotic journey of loss could actually make us kinder, more connected, and capable of experiencing happiness again?

Much-loved actor and author Greg Wise believes it can, and in Grief Talking he advocates for a necessary change in our modern, suppressive culture of mourning. He encourages honesty, vulnerability, and ritual as tools to navigate bereavement, reminding us that grief shapes us, but we can learn from it.

He explores the many episodes of grief that have punctuated his life: from the sudden drowning of a close friend in his twenties to the emotional aftermath of his sister's death from cancer and the unique pain of infertility and failed IVF. Through his own moving stories, Greg offers solace and understanding to readers experiencing similar pain. He explains how we should allow ourselves and others an open healthy processing of grief so that we can become kinder, more connected and experience happiness again.

'I am a being formed by loss, and I am uniquely more alive, more grateful, more compassionate, more understanding of my capabilities, more loving, more connected as a result of it. But I had to do the work . . . I don't think I ever really felt joy until I faced into my grief'

'What a treat to get to revisit the wonderfully eccentric bookseller Orlando and the characters of the Seven Sisters books! A must have for all Lucinda Riley fans'

Dear Bookseller,

Orlando returns the reader to the universe of Lucinda Riley's Seven Sisters. But didn't Atlas: The Story of Pa Salt put a neat bow atop the saga? Absolutely. We finally discovered exactly who Pa was and why he adopted each of the girls. This, therefore, is not book number nine.

After I had finished Atlas, my mother's brilliant characters continued to roam about my mind, with one in particular continually emerging from the throng: Orlando Forbes, the antiquarian bookseller first introduced in The Shadow Sister. Orlando is a true eccentric, from his eloquent turn of phrase to his Edwardian dress sense. Taken at face value, one might even describe him as a caricature. As a reader, I'd always interpreted his overt quirkiness as a façade, and I was desperate to scratch beneath the surface.

I think that at its heart Orlando is a character study. It's been joyful discovering what makes him tick, who he loves, what he has lost… and, of course, throwing him into the heart of a great big Seven Sisters dual timeline mystery:

When a nervous stranger asks him to locate a first edition copy of A Christmas Carol, the search leads Orlando and his shop manager, Star D'Aplièse, into the hidden history of Eliza Wetherill, a brilliant young Victorian woman who wrote under a male pseudonym. As their investigation deepens, Orlando reconnects with a figure from his past that forces him to confront his fear of affection. The narrative jumps between the High Weald Estate in Kent and Victorian London, until the shocking truth hidden within the pages of Dickens' first edition is revealed.

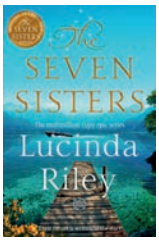

I have promised that this isn't book nine (and it's not.) I feel confident that a new reader could pick up this novel having never heard the word 'Pleiades' and find plenty to be entertained by. However . . . it is true to say that I deliberately left a couple of threads untied at the end of Atlas. Most pressingly, we still have absolutely no idea what happened to the son of Maia D'Aplièse and the villainous Zed Eszu, a storyline established thirteen years ago by Lucinda Riley, left completely unresolved . . .

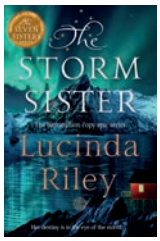

I've said too much.

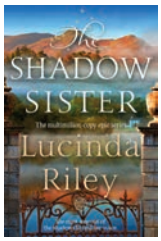

Finally, there would be little point returning to this universe without revisiting the family that readers have come to adore over the last thirteen years. Rest assured, all the sisters make an appearance in Orlando. No, that's not true – one is noticeably absent. After all she's busy off the page caught up in something far more terrifying . . .

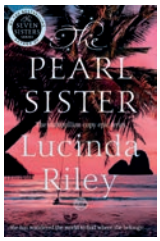

I've said too much. Again.

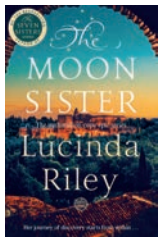

Harry Whittaker

Read a letter from Aaron Blabey to tell you more!

Dear Bookseller.

The world is about to end. We are, quite literally, cooked. And it's all because of a diabolical, intergalactic game show that's been running for 260 million seasons without us even knowing it.

In Game of Pets, you're going to meet Griff. He's allergic to basically everything (including fur, gluten, and probably sunlight), and he's just fainted in a pet shop. He is, quite possibly, the least likely hero in the history of the universe.

But Griff just bought a pet. Not a dog, not a cat, and definitely not a fish (don't ask). I can tell you this much - his new pet is named Bob. And Bob has a very important message for Griff . . . and for you.

You see, for millions of years, humans have thought they were the ones in charge. We thought we were the masters of our domain while our cute little pets just sat around waiting for treats. We were wrong.

Prepare to have your mind blown. Prepare to look at your hamster with deep suspicion. And most importantly, prepare to buckle up for an insane adventure that reveals the truth about who is really running the show.

Welcome to Game of Pets.

Watch your back . . . because on this planet, you aren't the player. You're the prize.

University of Virginia professor Emily Ogden delivers a spellbinding, haunting portrait of Edgar Allan Poe, the undisputed father of psychological horror and the detective story. Who exactly was Poe, and why does he haunt us still?

This gorgeous non-fiction hardback explores the tragic life, tortured romances, and enduring literary afterlife of America's darkest poet, showing how his masterpieces still shape our modern nightmares and live on in our imaginations. Poe inspired Arthur Conan Doyle to write Sherlock Holmes – and without him there would be no Stephen King, Tim Burton or Fyodor Dostoevsky. Blending biography, criticism, and memoir, Ogden unflinchingly reveals the beating heart of a man whose darkness might also help us to see the light.

THE DEFINITIVE MEMOIR FROM THE GREATEST FOOTBALL MANAGER OF ALL TIME, FILLED WITH OVER 60 NEVER-BEFORE-SEEN PHOTOGRAPHS AND MEMORABILIA FROM HIS PRIVATE ARCHIVES.

Sir Alex Ferguson tells the unique stories of 21 defining matches in his career in this intimate and heartfelt memoir, revealing fresh insights into his incredible journey from working-class Glasgow to the summit of global football as manager of Manchester United.

Reaching far beyond the trophy cabinet, Sir Alex relives seventy years of footballing history – from his first medal as a schoolboy in 1956 to watching United's 2024 FA Cup victory from the stands – to reflect on the relationships, rivalries, life lessons and moments of adversity that forged his character and his teams.

Written with Sir Michael Moritz, Games of My Life is a masterclass in leadership, persistence, and the enduring power of teamwork, told through the raw, unforgettable drama of the beautiful game.

Macmillan's biggest non-fiction book of the year with a major PR campaign, Games of My Life is the must-buy purchase for sport fans this Christmas. We have a very limited number of signed copies available and POS including a poster, standee and bookmarks. For Indies, we also have limited free art prints while stocks last.

A story of crimes committed and loves lost across space and time, Exit Party is the electrifying new novel from Emily St. John Mandel, the bestselling author of Station Eleven.

2031. America is at war with itself, but for the first time in weeks there is some hope: the Republic of California has been declared, the curfew in Los Angeles is lifted, and everyone in the city is going to a party.

Ari, newly released from prison, arrives with her friend Gloria just as a fragile new era begins. But there are people at the party who shouldn't be there. Something is very wrong . . .

Years later, living a different life in Paris, Ari remains haunted by that night. Whatever happened at the party fractured her sense of reality – and may hold the key to a very different world.

The Rouse

9781509847396 | HB | £35.00 | 17.09.26 | Picador | S

From the bestselling, award-winning master of The City & The City comes a defining work, twenty years in the making. A deeply moving, decade-and continent-spanning epic of grief, global tumult, and grim conspiracy.

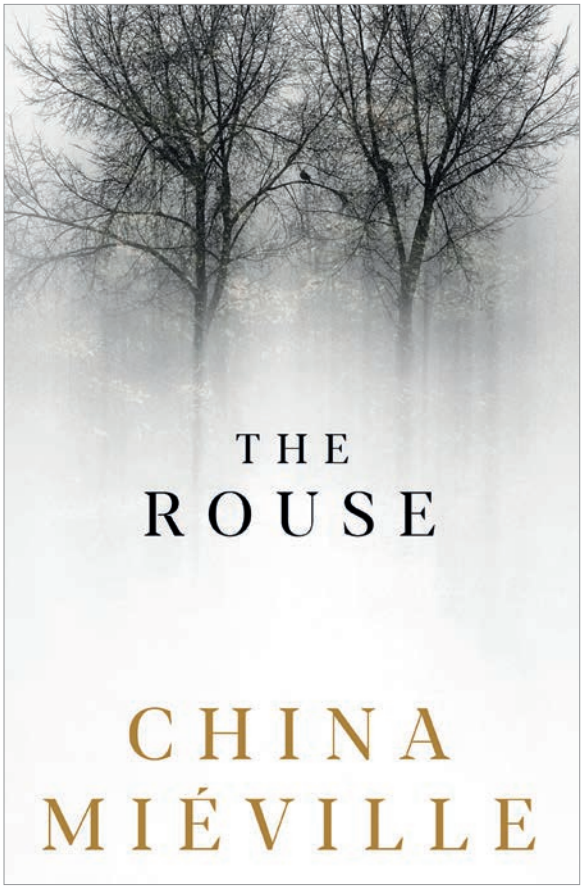

Maur's life has been shaped by an unbearable loss. But in the aftermath of what is an apparently ordinary tragedy, deeper, stranger questions arise. Their answers may lie within the dark heart and darker history of an old soldier who shares Maur's obsessions – and is violently pursued by the same unknown, unquiet forces.

So begins The Rouse, a masterpiece unlike any other: at once a sprawling saga of the bloody twentieth century, and the intimate story of two lives, their loves, regrets and secrets – and a terrifying journey into infinite mystery.
